UK Outlook for Monday 5 Apr 2021 to Wednesday 14 Apr 2021:
Continued unsettled weather into this period, and widely cold temperatures to start. A very cold day for all on Monday, with the north and west seeing the most frequent and heavy showers, but also likely affecting the east. The showers are likely to be wintry to low levels. This general picture continues into much of April, with showers most frequent around the north and east and any snow will most likely restricted to higher ground of the north later. Some strong winds developing for a time accentuating the cold feel. Towards the end of this period, however, mixed weather patterns begin to evolve meaning that although showers and longer spells of rain are still probable, some drier interludes are also likely. Temperatures are also likely to return to around average.
